

Your Guide to Watching GAA Legally in Ireland

On Air Ireland — onaireland.com equivalent (iptvirelandtv.com)

GAA coverage in Ireland is split across three separate broadcasters, and which one has your match depends on the round, not the county. This quick reference guide explains the split so you always know where to look — no unauthorized IPTV apps, no guesswork.

The Three-Way Broadcast Split

| Broadcaster | What They Show                                                                                                  | Cost              |
|-------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------|
| RTÉ         | A set number of live Championship games each season, plus Sunday and Monday highlights shows.                   | Free              |
| TG4         | Minor, U20, and camogie championships live, plus Monday night highlights.                                       | Free              |
| GAA+        | The remaining block of live Championship matches not shown free-to-air — historically around 40 games a season. | Paid subscription |

GAA+ was rebranded from GAAGO after the GAA took full ownership of the platform from RTÉ in early 2025.

How to Check Which Channel Has Your Match

1. Check the fixture list each week rather than assuming — coverage is assigned round by round, not by county or competition stage alone.
2. If a match isn't listed on RTÉ or TG4's published schedule for that week, it's very likely on GAA+.
3. GAA+ pricing is typically a flat season fee rather than per-match — check the current price directly on GAA+'s own site, since it changes between seasons.

Watching on a Streaming Device

The RTÉ Player and TG4 Player apps are available on all major streaming devices — Fire TV Stick, Apple TV, Chromecast, and most smart TV platforms. GAA+ runs as its own app on the same devices.
